

I am a satellite radio subscriber. Satellite radio is a service that I must pay for, as does everyone else. XM has a responsibility to provide it's paying customers what they want. No commercials is one of them. Traffic reports are another. Denying XM or any other satellite radio service the right to broadcast what they please to whoever is willing to pay for it is completely out of line, and a violation of free speech.

I have not turned back to commercial radio since I installed XM in my truck in 2002. Don't punish a company for giving the consumer what they want.

Mark Goodchild